STANFORD STUDENT IS KILLED WHEN AUTO HITS TREE

Two Stanford students were found unconscious under an overturned car near Belmont Tuesday avening by Frank Lopelt of San Francisco. Lopelt summoned aid and the two youths were removed. One, however, died within an hour and without regaining consciousness.

The two studnets were found to be Jack McGuire and W. A. Gilbert, Jr., both sophomores at the university. It was McGuire who died. Gilbert's condition is still serious, but he will recover.

It was stated by Gilbert after he had recovered consciousness that he was asleep in the car a the time the accident occured and he did not know how it happened. The two had gone for a ride to San Jose, he said, and he did not know how they happened to be at Belmont. A broken bottle which had contained liquor was found in the pocket of Gilbert's coat.

McGuire's home was in Long Beach and Gilbert's in Los Angeles.

CHANGES IN STREET NAMES PROPOSED BY PLAN BOARD

The fact that many of the names of streets in the territory recently added to this city by annexation are the same as streets already in Redwood City has caused the planning commission to suggest new names for these streets. The matter was given the attention of the board of trustees at its regular meeting Monday and City Attorney Mansfield was instructed to draw up an ordinance changing the names.

This orinance will be heard on November. 15, at which time any other suggestions will be welcomed by the board. It was felt that the matter was of particular interest to residents of the section in question, and they will be given an opportunity at that time to make any suggestions they wish concerning the changes of name for their streets.

The changes proposed by the planning commission are as follows:

Oak avenue from El Camino Real to Cypress street, to be changed to Hemlock avenue.

Ivy street from Cypress to siutherly end thereof to Ash street.

Walnut street from the Woodside road to the easterly end thereof, to Madrone street.

Sequoia avenue from Oakwood boulevard to the westerly end thereof to Oakwood boulevard East.

Oakwood boulevard from the junction with Sequoia avenue to the westerly line of Oakwood Park, to Oakwood boulevard West

Arlington road for its entire length from Woodside road to the angle to Valota road.

Portion of Oakwood boulevard changed to Carlos avenue.

Grant avenue changed to Poplar avenue.

WOODSIDE

A Hallowe'en party was given on Saturday night at the old school building by the Parent-Teacher Association. The whole community attended and the rooms were crowded. The place was tastefully decorated and appropriate games were played and stunts performed. Mrs. Owen of San Mateo, president of the county organization of Parent-Teacher Associations, gave an address and refreshments were served. Dancing closed the evening's festivities Altogether it was a very successful affair.

Mr. and Mrs. Willam Byrne returned on Monday, having curtailed their eastern trip somewhat in order that they might be in Woodside to cast their votes at the election. They report a thoroughly enjoyable trip but they found no place in their journeying for which they would exchange their home in Woodside.

The Misses Hemme, recently returned from Europe, Mrs. Ponting from the east, and Mrs. Richards and her daughter Ruth from Berkeley were luncheon guests of Miss May and Miss Clara Huddart on Monday last.

Mr. and Mrs. L. O. Jacques of Berkeley were week end guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Audiffred.

Mrs. James Eva and daughter recently returned from Europe, were guests this week of Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Mighall.

The Woodside School football team is to have some real coaching. The father of one of the team members has arranged for one of the Stanford football men to come out two or three afternoons a week and instruct the boys in the finer points of the game. Already the team has reached such proficiency that it is having difficulty in finding a competitor. Twice, recently, games that had been advertised had to be called off because the opposing teams lost their nerve at the last moment.

Mrs. J. A. Folger came up from her winter home at Carmel in order to cast her vote in Woodside. She returned to Carmel on Thursday.

WORK TO BE RUSHED ON WILLOW ROAD PAVING

The work of paving Willow road, one of the roads connecting with the Dumbarton bridge, will be rushed with all speed, according to W. W. Thompson of the Peninsula Paving Co., who was awarded a contract last Monday for the paving of the road. The contract was let by the board of supervisors for $24,529.75, there being no other bids offered.

It is hoped that the work will be completed by the 20th of this month, when the bridge will be opened for a few days to accomodate the crowds going to and from the Stanford-California football game.

SEQUOIA LOSES HARD GAME 20 - 0

The hopes of Sequoia for championship on the football grid were rudely shattered last evening when San Mateo defeated home team on the Sequoia turf by a score of 20 to 0. The game was one of the best of the season, however, and the Sequoia team put up a gallant fight. During the first quarter the visitors were held to a 0 to 0 score and enthusiasm was intense. The grand stands were thronged for the most important event of the season and both sides saw victory for their own teams.

It was during the second quarter, however, that the visitors made good their efforts to break down the defense of the Sequoians, and here they were able to roll up a score of 14 to 0, a score which Sequoia managed to keep through the third quarter without any change. In the last quarter the visitors were again successful and pulled their score up to 20 against the 0 of the home team.

Hopes for Sequoia's victory were high this year as a result of the Palo Alto having last week held the San Mateo team to a 7 to 7 tie, after having been defeated 6 to 0 by Sequoia. San Mateo and Sequoia were up to last night the only two teams of the Peninsula Athletic League which had not been defeated.

Last Friday the Sequoians were successful in securing the long end of a 7 to 0 game with San Jose.

Two basketball games were scheduled for last night with San Mateo, but were too late to be reported for this issue. One was between the 110-pond teams and the other between the 120s of the two schools. In a double header against Paol Alto last Friday evening both teams were successful, the 10s winning by a score of 18 to 9 and the 20s by 32 to 12. The 120-pound team has not been defeated this season.

Man Is Found Unconcious on Road, Head Cut

Found unconscious on the highway near the high school J. A. Story of this city is now at a loss to account for his condition. Story, an aged mail carrier, who narrowly missed beng hit last week by the train which killed the S. P. brakeman, says that he must have been struck by a passing car but has no remembrance of being hit. He was found by three high-school boys. Dr. H. Clattenberg was summoned and found that Story was suffering from a bad cut on the side of his head. The police are now endeavoring to ascertain whether the man had slipped on the pavement and struck his head on the curb or whether he had been struck by a passing car.

BUY AT HOME!

It has been said by a noted trade analist that, "The customer buys when three things are right: the place, merchandise, and price;" and not the least important of these is the place. Broad highways, smooth paved roads wind their way through the hills from the one side and over quickly traversed level miles from the other directions into Redwood City, making this community the economical point of trade for a radius of many miles.

It is always a source of satisfaction to the buyer to be able to meet the seller personally when the sale is consumated. Personal contact is one of the most important reqirements in a satisfactory transaction to every one concerned. How much more satisfield you feel with a purchase you have made of if you have met the dealer or his representative face to face. You have been enabled to ask questions and be thoroughly satisfied on every point. You are assured of his desire of your good will and future business. You feel instinctively his wish to give you personal service and you leave with your purchase pleased in the sure knowledge of dollar for dollar value for the money you have spent. Why sacrifice personal service for the uncertain printed p ise of a firm that will never see you and whom you will never see? Mail order buying is very often like the sugar-coated pill—pleasant at first taste, but quite bitter when the sweet has worn off.

After you have thought these things over and have stopped to consider the value of personal service and permanent good will think also of the value of your time.

It would be an insult to suggest that your own time is not valuable. It is, with all of us, our greatest asset. What we do with it largely regulates our happiness and the happiness of those who love and depend upon us. This we know to be true. How then can we argue with ourselves that it is good business to travel farther than our nearest natural trading center to do our trading?

Distant merchants may offer seeming inducements to draw our trade. It is natural that they should. They are forced to do so, if they wish to attractus. But merchandise, if it is honest, and manufactured to give honest value, cannot be sold for less than it costs to make and cut price goods almost invariaby result in a disappointed buyer. Your local merchant seeks your permanent good will. He must give honest values at honest prices. He has a heavy investment, a future to protect and he seeks your business week after week and year after not just for one time.

Give these things some serions thought. You will find that you ade doing your own self a good turn and putting dollars in the savings bank at the end of the year, if you "BUY AT HOME."

ANOTHER TIDE MOTOR

C. H. Brooks, inspired by the fact that the tides move with an irresistible force, has invented a tide motor which he believes will put the waters of Puget sound to work for the Tacoma municipal power department. The machine consists in part of a floating platform with gears that revolve against the cogs of a vertical shaft as the incoming tide lifts the platform and a second set of gears that revolve likewise against a second vertical cogged shaft as the outgoing tide allows the platform to descend. This motion naturally is slower, but a shaft is made to revolve with great rapidity through a system of accelerating gear wheels.

CALIFORNIA NEWS BRIEFS

Colonel John R. THE kind of printing that pays dividends is the kind you shall have. Pale, muddy, poor-weight printed matter is worse than none. The quality of your business is often judged by the quality of your stationery — inferior printing gives an impression of cheapness that is hard to overcome, while good printing carries with it a desirable suggestion of quality.
We produce our Quality Printing. Whether you want an inexpensive handbill or letterhead in colors, if you order it from us you will be sure of getting good work. We have the equipment and the "know how" that enables us to get out really good printing—printing that interests people with the goods or ideas its users. That is the kind of printing that

CIVIC PATRIOTISM

THE man who makes his daily round, uttering the old complaint of living in a "Dead Town," invariably has the wrong viewpoint. The real trouble is that he, himself, is the dead one. He doesn't keep pace with his town, in fact, doesn't know just how much life his town has.

Whenever you find such a citizen, ninety-nine times out of a hundred you will find a man who is doing nothing to make his town a good town. He will be the man who buys his goods from a mail-order house, or goes to the nearest city to purchase no better commodities at such price; that when his expenses are figured out he will have paid more than if he had staid at home and patronized his home merchants; he will have paid "too much for his whistle."

The making of a good town requires the utmost in co-operation on the part of all concerned. It requires public-spirited merchants and business men and a public that will show its appreciation of this public spirit by generous patronage.

The prosperity of a city depends as much upon this condition as any other to be found in the life of a community.

Have you ever considered the number of business houses in Redwood City that have been here for ten years or more? Have you ever considered what these men have meant to Redwood City? Have you ever thought of the honest goods at honest prices these men have dispensed during that time? Do you realize the thousands of dollars they have expended on taxes and improvements?

Why not spend your money with these men so that it will stay in Redwood City? It will in turn be spent with others in the city and this money means employment for others; necessities and a share of the luxuries for their families. And thus a happy community is built.

Think it over, you who have thoughtlessly spent Redwood City money in other cities. Redwood City needs you, she needs us all!

What will make Redwood City bigger and better? Industry, manufacturing, agriculture, payrolls.

BUT it is one question to get them and quite another to keep them. One trade analysist recently said: "The quicker we learn how to keep and take proper care of our industrial acquisitions, the easier it will be for us to secure them.."

Building & Loan Assets Increased Report Shows

In the annual report which A. E. Falch, building and loan commissioner, has just forwarded to Governor Richardson, the statement is made that the greatest year in building and loan history was the period which ended June 30, 1926. "During that time," the report sets forth, "the assets increased over fifty millions, or more than the entire assets of the associations in 1920 or any of the fifty-five years prior thereto. During this time, too, more associations were licensed than during any previous year, 26 corporations qualifying for charters, making the total at the close of the year 189, or 99 more than in 1920."

The total assets of the associations, based upon the "call" reports of the associations, on June 30, were $210,879.10, or $70,221,711 more than was reported by the associations the previous year.

The number of shareholders and investors increased from 156,388 to 223,440, or an increase of 67,052 as compared with 39,999 the previous year. These shareholders and investors are composed of 135,559 male and 87,881 female. The average investment per person is $774.34.

The report sets forth that there are thirty counties without associations and that one county, Monerey, was added during the past year. The associations are located in 85 cities of the state, an increase of nine cities over the past year.

The cities having building and loan associations with total assets in excess of $1,000,000 are given in the following order: Los Angeles, San Jose, Long Beach, San Francisco, Stockton, Pomona, Santa Barbara, Oakland, Pasadena San Diego, Berkeley, Redlands, San Bernrdino, Palo Alto, Alameda, Whittier, Santa Ana, Culver City, Ontario, Anaheim, Santa Pala, Orange, Riverside, Bakersfield, Santa Monica, Glendale, Fresno. Five cities entered the million dollar class during the past year.

The popularity of building and loan association loans among borrowers is attested by the increase in the number of borrowers and loans. There are 65,552 borrowers, an increase of 14,941 over 1925. Dring the past year 11,759 building loans were made, an increase of 2,991 over the past year 11,759 building loans were made, an increase of 2,991 over the past year. Now real estate loans made numbered 27,904, an increase of 9,308.

The book value of real estate owned by associations is given in the report as $2,737,400.81, an increase of 48 per cent. Of this amount $1,296,709.43 is invested by 27 associatiins in property acquired for office buildings.

Mr. Falch makes the statement in his report that California during the past year advanced from eighth to seventh place as an association state. He adds: "Instead of being seventh, California should be at least third or fourth in the list. If the present high ideals are adhered to and associations continue to do business along lines of safety, giving strict obedience to their laws, rules and regulations, it will not be many years until California will reach that place."

President McLean stated that the meeting will be called to order at 9:30 Mondal, November 8. Following the address of welcome by J. A. BAKING SODA GUILTY OF HARM IN CASES OF DYSPEPSIA

By L. Winfield Kohn, M. D.
.... New York City ....
Member Gorgas Memorial Institute

The habit of taking common baking soda, with its resultant temporary relief in cases of so-called dyspepsia, has, in a vast number of instances, done more harm than good. This is true because of the neglect of the occasioned in having early recognition made of the true state of the disease.

Dyspepsia, as most people believe, is not a disease of the stomach, primarily. The symptoms are very often the result of disorders in other parts of the body. The stomach is secondarily affected in most cases, and in order to treat the condition properly, the cause must be accurately determined.

Symptoms, few or many, may consist of heartburn, belching, nausea, vomiting, loss of appetite and actual pain of moderate or severe degree.

Now as a matter of fact such symptoms may be the result of influences on the nervous system. For example, anxiety, fear, worry, mental strain or exhaustion, directly or through the medium of certain glands, may be responsible.

On the other hand, diseases in other organs, as well as in the stomach proper may be guilty. Many digestive complaints have their primary origin in the intestinal liver and gall tracts. Some may be traced to tuberculosis, tonsils, adenoids, or teeth. In fact the origin of the disturbance, which seems to come from the stomach, may be located in any remote organ.

It is also true that dyspeptic symptoms may result from disease within the stomach itself, and this may occur from catarrh, inflamation, ulceration, growth, muscle weakness or displacement. When these conditions occur, the cure is, of course, more difficult to attain.

Dyspepsia, therefore, implies a great variety of possible causes, and it is not as simple as we are inclined to believe. Not to regard this condition lightly but rather to have a proper appraisal made of one's case is the essential procedure, especially since such a large proportion of men and women suffer from so-called dyspepsia symptoms.

In searching for the cause of the distrubance, personal habits must not be overlooked. Many, many times, overeating, smoking, drinking, other indulgences, or worms within the digestive tract bring on the attacks.

Again they may be the result of conditions of the human mind. For a person afflicted with mental stress and strain is liable to the development of dyspepsia than are other individuals. The nervous system which controls the activities of the stomach is very easily influenced by a disturbed mind.

FOUR COMMON DEFECTS OF CHILDHOOD

By C. N. Peeler, M. D.,
Charlotte, N. C.
Member Gorgas Memorial Institute

"As the twig is bent; so is the tree inclined.

"Train a child in the way it shall go and when it gets old it will not depart from it."

For a month or more now boys and girls have been at work in the public schools of the nation, preparing for the time when they will assume the same sort of responsibilities their parents are now shouldering. To keep children physically well, to train them in health habits, therefore, is a mighty important part of their present trainng.

There are four common defects for which parents should be on guard if they believe that nothing should be neglected which will maintain or improve health in their children. These defects all too common, are: underweight, bad tonsils and adenoids; diseased or defective eyes and teeth.

Every boy and girl at the beginning of school should have his weight checked. If much more than ten per cent underweight, it is advisable to consult the family physician to determine whether there exists faulty health or diet habits which should be corrected in order that the child may be able to withstand the strain and exposure of school life.

Have your children examined by your dentist, too. Protect their teeth because there is only one permanent set. By taking care of teeth parents can do a valuable service to their children which in later life will be greatly appreciated. Good teeth are necessary for good digestion.

Enlarged or diseased tonsils and adenoids are defects frequently present in children. These defects are often responsible for frequent colds, mouth breathing, restless sleep, earache, dull listless face expression, all of which are detrimental to sound present as well as future health.

Does your child frown while reading? Has he granulated eyelids? Does he hold the book too close to his eyes? A pair of glasses, fitted by a competent oculist, may be what your child needs for his eyes.

Correct these defects and physical and mental development will be happier and do much better work in school.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Rumanian Queen Having a Lively Time in Her Tour of America.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

MARIE, the beautiful queen of Rumania, grabbed the front page last week, and it is a fair guess that the men of America as well as the women followed her doings with great interest. For three days after her arrival in New York she, with her son and daughter, was the official guest of the nation. Hurrying directly to Washington, her majesty made a formal call on President and Mrs. Coolidge at the White House late Tuesday afternoon, which call was promptly returned, according to official etiquette, at the Rumanian legation, where the queen was lodged. A few hours later Marie was given a state dinner at the White House.

Before these official doings, Queen Marie motored to Arlington and paid graceful tribute at the tomb of the Unknown Soldier, and then was driven to Mount Vernon. On Wednesday she visited the Naval academy at Annapolis and reviewed the 17,500 middies there, and also went to Baltimore, where she was given a great reception and a lot of Maryland fried chicken and beaten biscuits. Thence back to New York, where, still enthusiastic and untired, she attended a great levee given for her at the Ritz-Carlton by William Nelson Cromwell, president of the Society of Friends of Rumania. Thursday she went to Philadelphia to see the Sesquicentennial exposition.

Beginning now her real tour of America, the queen was in the hands of Samuel Hill, son-in-law of the late James J Hill. The itinerary, as revised by him, takes the party, after a visit to Niagara, through Canada to Minneapolis and St. Paul; to Mary Hill, Wash., for the dedication of a fine arts museum; to Portland, Seattle, Vancouver, and eastward again to the Glacier National park; and through Denver, Kansas City, St. Louis and Springfield to Chicago, where there will be a stop of several days. On the way thence to the Atlantic seaboard Marie will see Indianapolis, Louisville, Cincinnati, Detroit, Cleveland and Pittsburgh. California was eliminated from the list of states to be visited because the railroads there refused to carry the queen's train over their lines for a nominal charge, as had all other railroads.

Of course, the snobs, notoriety seekers and such like folk took advantage of Queen Marie's visit to the utmost, but she is not to be blamed for that. Her majesty seems to be a "regular feller," thoroughly interested in the people and things she sees and certainly no more pretentious than a queen should be.

INTERNATIONAL bankers and industrialists of fifteen nations, including the United States, issued a manifesto in New York and all the European capitals, urging the removal of tariff barriers and other restrictions upon European trade in order to place the continent upon an equal footing, both in living standards and commercial competition, with the United States. John J. Mitchell of Chicago, one of the signers, said: "It should be distinctly understood that the manifesto in no way refers to American tariffs, either by allusion or by inference." It involves only post-war European trade agreements and immigration and industrial restrictions.

The council of the International Chamber of Commerce, in Paris, adopted a report substantially following the recommendations of the bankers' manifesto. The American representatives in the council did not vote on the question. This report urges free movement of raw materials and the abolition of export duties and restrictions. It also proposes abolishment of compulsory visas, as hampering business as well as tourist trade, and condemns all laws discriminating against foreigners, demanding that they be given the same right as nationals everywhere, "with complete freedom of movement, right to domicile, liberty to establish any business or industry, and generally enjoy the same legal and social rights as nationals."

SENATOR REED of Missouri, sole representative of his senatorial investigation committee, resumed the inquiry into the Illinois primary and campaign funds, and also took up certain features of the Indiana political scandal. Sitting in Chicago, he called before him witnesses who told the support the Illinois Anti-Saloon league is giving Frank L. Smith, regular Republican candidate for the senate, and the reasons why that dry organization had refused to back Hugh S. Magill, independent Republican candidate. George B. Safford, league superintendent for Illinois, was heard first, and the caustic Missourian had a fine time with him, making him virtually admit that the league was ignoring the slush fund charges against Smith because he is a dry and had a better chance to defeat Brennan, the wet Democrat, than has Magill. Then Safford told a long story of his dealings with Rev. Robert O'Brien, one of the originators of the Magill candidacy, which story later reacted greatly to his disadvantage. The minister, he said, told him the Magill committee had raised between three and four hundred thousand dollars and would spend it in the campaign, and he added a lot of detail of this conversation. Next day Mr. O'Brien went before Senator Reed and branded Safford's story as "an absolute falsehood," and Harold L. Ickes, Magill's campaign manager, testified that it was "not even a clever lie." The young minister substantiated his denial by a complete relation of his meetings and conversations with Safford and Scott McBride, national superintendent of the league. A full list of contributors to the Magill campaign fund was given Mr. Reed, showing the contributions to be $17,375.

When Senator Reed took up the Indiana affair he was told by a former Klansman, Hugh Pat Emmons of South Bend, that $10,000 was offered Emmons if he would lead his fellow members of the klan to the support of Senator James E. Watson, Republican candidate for re-election. The offer, Emmons said, was made by W. Lee Smith of Evansville, then grand dragon of Indiana, who told him the klan proposed to make Watson President of the United States in 1928. Emmons also gave descriptions of the klan's organization and ritual which kept the audience in a gale of laughter. In Indianapolis Senator Watson issued a statement characterizing Emmons' testimony as "preposterous" and declaring he never had any understanding with the klan by which he was to receive its support in exchange for votes on pending legislation or other consideration. Being confined to a hospital, he asked that the committee go to Indianapolis to take his testimony, and Senator Reed at once complied.

SOUTHERN Florida was thrown into panic by prospects of being swept by another Caribbean hurricane, but escaped when the storm veered off to the northeast. Cuba was not so fortunate, for the hurricane passed over Matanzas, Pinar del Rio and Havana provinces, doing immense damage and taking a toll of several hundred lives. The city of Havana was the greatest sufferer and many of the deaths occurred there. The material losses in the capital were estimated at $30,000,000. In the harbor scores of vessels, including two steamers, were sunk. The lower parts of the city were inundated. The monument erected by Cuba to the Americans killed in the blowing up of the battleship Maine in 1898 was razed, only the base and two guns from the Maine remaining.

PRESIDENT CALLES and the Mexican government have decided that the never conquered Yaquis of Sonora must be destroyed as a tribe and people, and the grand council of war, headed by General Obregon, has laid plans to carry out the decision. An army of 18,000 is being prepared and it is to be equipped with machine guns, mountain artillery, gas, bombing and photographing planes of the latest types and every other modern device of warfare that can be needed.

PREMIERS and leading statesmen of the self-governing British dominions and delegates from India gathered in London last week for an imperial conference, the purpose of which was to adjust more smoothly the relations between the British central government and the component parts of the huge empire. Though several of the premiers, notably Hertzog of South Africa, were insistent, in their opening addresses, on "free nationhood," "equality" and international recognition of independence, it was believed there would be no exciting debates and few if any radical changes. One matter caused a lot of interest. Canada, Ireland and South Africa were determined to bring about the abolition of appeal to the privy council on matters of domestic concern.

THERE is small prospect for an early reduction in land armaments in Europe, for seven nations notified the preliminary disarmament conference in Geneva that they would not limit their trained reservists until a system of security is organized which will compensate for the present inequality of their war resources. These nations are Italy, Belgium, France, Poland, Rumania, Czecho-Slovakia and Jugo-Slavia. Premier Pilsudski has increased Poland's armed strength by incorporating the nation's police force in the army.

LEON TROTZKY and his associates of the opposition in Russia have saved themselves from probable exile to Siberia by publicly repudiating their opposition in a statement in the press. They declare they still disagree with the majority of the central committee on a number of principal problems but have "definitely given up fractional methods of defense of our views because of the danger of such methods for the unity of the party."

NORWAY, in a national plebiscite, hit prohibition a heavy blow, the people deciding by a big majority that the existing law prohibiting the use of liquor exceeding 2½ per cent of alcohol was unsuitable to conditions in Norway, the general opinion being that there is more drunkenness and the people are poorer. It is believed the law will speedily be repealed.

Premier Ferguson of Ontario, in dissolving the provincial legislature, declared his government would go to the people on a policy of government control and sale of liquors and would stand or fall by the result. He holds the efforts of Ontario to enforce its dry law during ten years have been futile.

GOV. ROLAND H. HARTLEY of Washington is charged with malfeasance and misfeasance in office in petitions for his recall. The charges are divided into three counts: That he prevented, through the boards of regents of the University of Washington and Washington State college, and the state board of equalization, expenditure of funds appropriated by the last legislature for educational buildings and equipment; that he "maliciously and without cause" removed four regents, "falsely charging each of them with misconduct and malfeasance in office"; and that he appointed six members of the state legislature to lucrative state positions in order to obtain their support for his legislative policies.

A legislative committee investigating the Texas highway commission was told that James E. Ferguson, husband of the governor, had offered to obtain road maintenance contracts for L. D. Winder of Belleville if Winder would pay him $7,500, which was approximately 10 per cent of the contract price. Ferguson said the accusation was an infamous falsehood and that he did not even know Winder.

EUGENE V. DEBS, for many years the leader of Socialists in the United States and five times their candidate for President, died in a sanitarium near Chicago at the age of seventy-one years. During the war he was sent to the federal penitentiary at Atlanta for trying to obstruct the draft, and was pardoned by President Harding late in 1921. His health was broken and since then he had not been active in politics.

Sales on Installment Reach Into Billions

Six and one-half billion dollars worth of goods are sold annually in the United States on the installment plan. Of the debt incurred by this vast purchase on the part of the public only $2,750,000,000 is outstanding at any one time.

These are the two outstanding figures in a report on a countrywide survey recently completed by the National Association of Finance companies and now being prepared for presentation to 500 financiers of America who will gather in Chicago for the third annual convention of the association November 15 and 16.

The low ratio of the outstanding debt to the total turnover, 42 per cent, constitutes safe and thoroughly sound banking risk, the report states, and reputable firms are rapidly changing their attitude of distrust toward installment buying to one of keen interest and participation in the method.

About 54 per cent of the outstanding installment debt at any given time is for automobiles—a total of about $1,500,000,000.

In 1925 there were 1,000 finance companies actively engaged in handling installment funding. These carry on about one-third of the total business. The rest is conducted by dealers, manufacturers and banks. The finance companies confine themselves to automobiles for the most part. Most of them will be represented at the convention.

SMART ONE-PIECE CLOTH DRESS; NOVELTIES IN STYLISH HATS

AS TO "button, button, who's got the button," there are none missing this season within fashion's domain. The stylist is not losing sight of a button of any description, employing myriads of them either in a useful or an ornamental way. In consequence, button counters present a scene of unusual animation, for choosing buttons for one's new frock or coat has become a matter of outstanding importance.

The mode smiles approvingly on the practical yet smartly styled cloth frock which buttons up the front like the one shown in the picture. For the eccentric. The picturesque African draped headdress happens to be the inspiration of one of the noted French modistes. Another leading designer adopts the Russian effects. All are charming and are proving popular with lovers of charming millinery this season.

In materials no less of novelty is expressed. Flat furs, notably shaved lamb and spotted calfskin as supple as any fabric, supply another sensation in the millinery story for this season.

Then, too, the prevalence of exquisite beige velours helps turn the tailored twill, flannel or crepe wool frock, self-colored bone buttons are considered good form, or cloth-covered ones if so preferred.

Fashion, however, does not expect one to be unerringly practical when it comes to the buttons we sew on our frocks and our coats. At the sight of the adorable jeweled buttons which are making their appearance in such great numbers this season, one loses zest for things too utilitarian and prosaic. That is why so many of the pretty crepe and silken frocks fairly sparkle with buttons set in rhinestones. At throat and at girdle link jeweled buttons prove a beautifying touch to many a costume. The velvet frock, which leads all others this season, in black or in color, needs no other embellishment to lend to its enchantment if there be link rhinestone buttons positioned advantageously at neck and at waistline.

From buttons to buckles is not a far cry, and if the one does not perform the act of fastening the belt or girdle, the other does. Especially is this true in regard to the popular redingote dress models which are clasped together at the front waistline.

Millinery, ever capricious and always doing the unexpected thing, is giving some extra thrills this season. There is, for instance, the matter of draping which is truly extraordinary. Especially do close-fitting turban styles emphasize the curious and the attention of the world of fashion into a new trend of thought.

Often velours and flat fur are combined in the newest models in a manner illustrated in two of the hats in this group. Spotted beige and white unborn calf are so interworked as to appear not as a trimming but rather as an intrinsic part of the shape itself.

Each of the hats in this picture feature the fashionable beige color. The smartly styled turban in the upper right corner shows a clever manipulation of fine velours. Of course it boasts a rhinestone ornament as do the majority of hats this season.

Group of the Latest Hats.

Concluding this group of stylish hats is a turban most cunningly draped with a drop-side effect and two smart-looking spikes piercing the felt flap most effectively.

Among other imported models using flat fur is a striking African draped model made of alternating rows of black and gray shaved lamb.

Velencia New Color

For evening the geranium reds vie with mauves and violets for leadership. The best violet is named valencia, sometimes called primrose pink. It is an orchid, almost pink, and unusual to the eyes of the mode.

Borrowed From Man

The finely tucked vest with the narrow Peter Pan collar and tiny buttons is featured on many of the striped wash silk sports dresses.

Flower at Wrist

One of the very feminine conceits of the mode is the use of the flower bracelet—a flower the color of one's frock is slipped into one's bracelet or a ribbon band allowed to fall over the hand. Needless to state, this style is only for evening.

Very New, Indeed

The quilted taffeta coat is smart both for day and evening wear, and frequently has a flaming lining.

THE WHY OF HOME TRADING

A city depends very largely upon its business district for its existence. Its homes, are, of course, very essential, yet every movement for advancement must of necessity be fostered by the businessmen of the city in order to prove successful. A large share of the taxes of a city must be paid by the businessmen, and every drive for charitable work, and community service is born almost entirely by the men who constitute your business community. These are a few of the things which the buyer should take into consideration before going out of town to purchase his goods.

Here in Redwood City we have merchants of almost every line, carrying stocks of goods as good as can be purchased anywhere, and as complete as your trade warrants. In the stores of Redwood City you will be received with just as much courtesy as you will in stores of other towns, sold the same quality of goods at comensurate prices, your money will assist your fellow townsman in improving his stock and his service and will make your town a better place in which to live.

The people of Redwood City are besieged daily with propaganda to buy elsewhere. Consider each in connection with the above facts and judge for yourself which is the best policy. You know your local merchant, that he is reliable, that if his goods are not satisfactory he will gladly make them so; that the presence in town of the local merchant's store is worth more to you than the dollar or two saved on a "special" of doubtful value advertised as a leader by some merchant whom you do not know in San Francisco or some other town far enough away that if there be a saving made, it is used up in carfare.

The outsider seeking to extract money from the townspepole finds many ways to present his argument to make it sound alluring. The local merchant has one sure way, his home-town newspaper. The newspaper which has the interest of the town at heart realizes that its interests are best served by aiding in the prosperity of others, especially the businessmen of the community, and is always willing to do its part to foster a trade-at-home spirit. Within the pages of this paper will be found the ads of merchants in practically every line of trade. When you have tried these people, then and not till then, can you conscientiously say that it is to your advantage to trade elsewhere. You save money by buying at home.

Gratifying Reuslt

The big Republican landslide of last Tuesday is very gratifying and pleasing to all members of the grand old party. The splendid vote given Senator Shortridge in the state was a decided acknowledgement of his worth and popularity. It also is an approval of the senator's adherence to the policies of Calvin Coolidge, the great leader of the Republican party. The large vote accorded Senator Shortridge in his home county shows how he is held in the esteem of his neighbors. His majority over his opponent, Elliott, was nearly four to one. Mr. Shortridge was given the highest vote ever accorded a candidate for senator in the State of California. This is a complete demonostration of the popularity and an approval and appreciation of his services at Washington for the people of the state.

The big vote given C. C. Young for governor shows how he is held by the voters of the state. He will carry with him to the office the full knowledge of the manner in which he is held by the people of the state. He has all the qualifications necessary to make a splendid governor. We predict a successful administration for him at Sacramento Mr.Young will be a popular governor and a careful and wise official.

Buron Fitts defeated all records in his race for lieutenant governor. He is a popular young man with plenty of native ability and experience gained in the school of hard work. He will be a credit to the state and will honor the position. We congratulate him on his wonderful victory.

The return of Arthur M. Free to congress by an overwhelming vote was as it should be. Mr. Free is a popular official who has done his full duty for his constituents at Washington. It would be an error to change him for a new man who would have to serve several terms to gain the experience now enjoyed by Mr. Free.

Now that the election is over let all partician feeling be forgotten. Let everyone get behind the winners so that they may be encouraged in their efforts to serve all the people all the time.

INDIANS TO POW-WOW

The first Friendly Indian Pow Wow of the season will be held at the Sequoia high grounds on Saturday, the 13th, for all "Friendly Indian Tribes" of the county. Tribes from South San Francisco, Burlingame and San Mateo, in addition to the Redwood City tribes are preparing to take part in this Pow Wow. Although football is strictly not an Indian game, seeing that the Indian colleges over the country are playing this game, the tribes have asked that a football meet be put on as a part of the program, similar to the one pulled off for the "Pioneers" in Berkeley several weeks ago. The events decided upon are: punting for distance, drop-kicking goal, and forwarding passing for distance.

At this time boys of the various tribes who have won their way to "Warrior" or Brave" rankings will be presented with these buttons.

The "Friendly Indians" is an organization for boys 9-12 years of age under the Y. M. C. A. program. Any boy of this age interested in membership in this organization can find out more about it by calling Roy A. Hohberger, the Y. M. C. A. Boys' Work Secretary, at Redwood City, 1155-W.

Lomita Park Paving Again Before

The paving matter in Lomita Park, which occupied the center of the stage in the meetings of the board of supervis... about three years ago again cropped out this week with the filing of a petition by some of the residents of that section asking that the appeal which was taken to the supreme court de dropped. The petition was presented to the board by W. L. Horrick, who addressed the board in the matter, asking that District Attorney Swart be instructed to withdraw the appeal now in the Supreme court from the Superior court of this county in the mandamus proceedings instituted to compel the chairman of the board of supervisors to sign the contract with the Municipal Improvement Co.

The petition met with the vigorous protest of Attorney Colebird, representing property owners who believe that the figure of the bid submitted by the improvement company is too high and who favor a less expensive type of pavement. Attorney Joe Gordon presented the other side of the question.

The matter proved a fruitful argument and a number of residents of the district appeared before the board expressing views on both sides of the question. Practically all of the morning session of the board was taken up by these arguments which at times were more personal than logical.

District Attorney Swart was then called upon to give a resume of the whole proceeding, which he did. Supervisor Hickey then offered a ... the district ... the case be ... preme court. ... The Girl in the Mirror

By Elizabeth Jordan

(© by The Century Company.) WNU Service

STORY FROM THE START

Laurie Devon, a gay young chap somewhat inclined to wildness, has recently succeeded as a playwright. His wealthy sister Barbara, who has helped him to succeed, has just been married and is going to Japan, leaving Laurie on his own. Epstein and Bangs, his theatrical partners, have promised Barbara to keep an eye on Laurie. They scold him for his laziness of late, and he retorts that he seeks adventure. From his window in New York he sees the reflection of a beautiful girl in a mirror in the house opposite. From the elevator boy in the girl's house Laurie learns the girl's name is Mayo. Again in the mirror's reflection he sees her with a revolver and fears she means to commit suicide. He rushes into her apartment, and, winning her confidence, induces her to lunch with him, though she warns him of danger. At lunch she admits there is a mystery in her life. She says also that her funds are almost exhausted, but refuses flatly Laurie's offer of financial help. As a stranger enters the restaurant, the girl mutters "He has found me." Upon learning that the man has no claim on her, Laurie warns the stranger not to molest the girl, whose name, Laurie learns, is Doris.

"Shaw," she answered, unwillingly. "Is it spelled P-s-h-a-w?"

Laurie asked the question with polite interest. Then, realizing that in her preoccupation she did not follow this flight of his mercurial spirits, he sobered. "It's a perfectly good name," he conceded, "but there must be more of it. What's the rest?"

"He calls himself Herbert Ransome Shaw."

Laurie made a mental note of the name.

"I shall call him Bertie," he firmly announced, "to show you how unimportant he really is. By the way"—a sudden memory struck him—"he told me your name—Doris."

He added the name so simply that he seemed to be calling her by it. A faint shadow of her elusive smile touched her lips.

"I like it—Doris," Laurie repeated, dreamily.

"I am so glad," she murmured.

He ignored the irony in her tone.

"I suppose you have several more, like our friend Bertie, but you needn't tell them to me. If I had to use them every time I spoke to you, it might check my inspiration. Doris will do very nicely. Doris, Doris!"

"Are you making a song of it?"

"Yes, a hymn."

She looked at him curiously.

"You're a queer boy. I can't quite make you out. One minute you're serious, and the next—"

"If you're puzzled over me, picture my mental turmoil over you."

"Oh—me?" With a gesture she consigned herself to the uttermost ends of the universe.

The taxicab had stopped. They had reached the studio building without observing the fact. The expression on the features of the chauffeur suggested that if they wanted to sit all day they could do it, but that it would not be his personal choice. Doris held out her hand.

"Good-by," she said gently. "And thank you. I'm really more—appreciative—than I seem."

Laurie's look expressed more surprise than he had ever really experienced over anything.

"But we haven't settled matters!" he cried. "We're going to the bank—"

"We are not."

She spoke with sharp decision. Then, relenting at the expression of his face, she touched the heavy gold-and-amber chain around her neck.

"I can pawn this," she said briefly. "It didn't seem worth while before, but as I've got to go on, I promise you I will do it. I will do it today," she added hurriedly, "this afternoon, if you wish. It is valuable. I can get enough on it to keep me for a month."

"I'll we find that job for you," he suggested, brightening.

She agreed, with a momentary flash of her wonderful smile.

"And you will let me drop in this evening and take you to dinner?"

"No, thank you. But—" again she relented—"you may come in for an hour at eight."

"I believe you are a crowned head," murmured Laurie, discontentedly. "That's just the way they do in books. When I come I suppose I must speak only when I'm spoken to. And when you suddenly stand up at nine, I'll know the audience is over."

She laughed softly, her red-brown eyes shining at him. Her laughter was different from any other laughter he had ever heard.

"Good-by," she repeated.

He helped her out of the cab and escorted her into the studio building, where he rang the elevator bell and waited, hat in hand, until the car came down. When it arrived Sam was in it. Before it stopped he had recognized the waiting pair through the open ironwork of the door. To Laurie, the elevator and Sam's jaw seemed to drop in unison.

The next instant the black boy had resumed his habitual expression of indifference to all human interests. Dead-eyed, he stared past the two young things. Dead-eared, he ignored their moving lips. But there was fellowship in the jocund youth of all three. In an instant when Laurie stepped back into the hall as the car shot upward, the eyes of the negro and white man flashed a question and an answer:

In Sam's: "You done took her out an' fed her?"

In Laurie's: "You bet your boots I did!"

CHAPTER VI

Laurie Solves a Problem

Laurie walked across the square to his own rooms. A sudden gloom had fallen upon him. He saw himself sitting in his study, gazing remotely at his shoes, until it was time to dress for the evening and his formal call on Doris.

The prospect was not attractive. He hoped Bangs would be at home. If so, perhaps he could goad him into one of the rages in which Bangs was so picturesque; but he was not sure of even this mild diversion. Rodney had been wonderfully sweet-tempered the past three days, though preoccupied, as if in the early stages of creative art. Laurie half suspected that he had begun work on his play. The suspicion aroused conflicting emotions of relief and half-jealous regret. Why couldn't the fellow wait till they could go at it together? He ignored the fact that already the fellow had waited six weeks.

Bangs was not at home. The square, flat-topped mahogany desk at which the two young men worked together blinked up at Laurie with the undimmed luster of a fine piece of furniture on which the polisher alone had labored that morning. Without taking the trouble to remove his hat and coat, Laurie dropped into a chair and tried to think things out. But the process of thinking eluded him, or, rather, his mind shied at it as a skittish horse might shy if confronted on a dark road with shapes vaguely familiar yet mysterious.

Frankly, he couldn't make head or tail of this mess Doris seemed to be in. His memory reminded him that such "messes" existed. He had heard and read of all sorts of plots and counter-plots, in which all types of humans figured. His imagination underscored the memory. But, someway, Doris—he loved to repeat the name even to himself—someway Doris was not the type that figured in such plots.

Also, there were other things hard to understand. She had let herself starve for four days, though she wore around her neck a chain that she admitted represented a month's support. And this fellow, Herbert Ransome Shaw—where the devil did he come in? A fellow with a name like that and with snaky eyes like his was capable of anything. And yet—

Young Devon had the intolerance of American youth for the things outside his personal experience. The sort of thing Doris was hinting at didn't happen here; that was all there was to it. What was happening seemed pretty clear. The girl was, or fancied herself, in the power of an unscrupulous scamp who was using that power for some purpose of his own. If that was it—and this thing, Laurie handsomely admitted, really did happen sometimes—it ought to be fairly easy for an athletic chap of twenty-four to put an end to it. He recalled the look in Shaw's projecting eyes, the snakelike forward thrust of his sleek head; and an intense desire seized him to get his hands on the fellow's throat and choke him till his eyes stuck out twice as far as they did now. If that were duty, then duty would be a delight.

Having reached this edifying point in his reflections, he rose. Why delay? Perhaps he could find the chap somewhere. Perhaps the waiter at the restaurant where they had lunched knew where he lived. But, no, of course not. It was not the kind of restaurant his sort patronized. Shaw had simply followed him and Doris there; that was all there was to it. He, Laurie, would have to wait for another encounter. Meantime he might run around to the club and box for an hour. He had been getting a little out of condition this month. A bout with McDonald, the club trainer, would do him good. Or, by Jove, he'd go and see Louise Ordway!

He had promised his new brother-in-law, Bob Warren, to keep an eye on Bob's sister while Warren and Barbara were in Japan, and Laurie had kept the promise with religious fidelity and very real pleasure. He immensely liked and admired Mrs. Ordway, who seemed, strangely, to be always at home of late. He had formed the habit of running in several times a week. Louise not only talked, but, as Laurie expressed it, "she said things." He had spent with her many of the afternoons and evenings Bangs checked up to the cabarets.

He glanced at his watch. For an hour he had been impersonating a gentleman engaged in profound meditation, with the sole result that he had decided to go to see Louise. It was quite possible he could enlist her interest in Doris. Now, that was an inspiration! Perhaps Mrs. Ordway would understand Doris. Every woman, he vaguely believed, understood all other women. He smoothed his hair, straightened his tie, and hurried off.

He found Mrs. Ordway reclining on a chaise longue before an open fire, in the boudoir in which his sister Barbara had spent so many hours of the past year, playing the invalid to sleep. She wore a superb Mandarin coat, of soft and ravishing tints, and her love for rich colors was reflected in the autumnal tones of her room and even in the vari-colored flames of her driftwood fire. To Louise these colors were as definite as mellow trumpet-tones. She had responded to them all her life. She was responding to them still, now that she lay dying among them. Something in their superb arrogance called for an answering note from her own arrogant soul.

She greeted her brother's young brother-in-law with the almost disdainful smile she now turned on everything, but which was softened a little for him. Ignorant of the malady that was eating her life away, as indeed all her friends were ignorant of it, save Barbara and her doctors, Laurie delighted in the picture she made. He showed his delight as he dropped into a chair by her side. They fell at once into the casual banter that characterized their intercourse.

"I wonder why I ever leave here?" he mused aloud, as the clock struck six. He had been studying with a slight shock the changes that had taken place in the few days since he had seen her. For the first time the suspicion crossed his mind that she might be seriously ill. Throughout their talk he had observed things, trifles, perhaps, but significant, which, if they had occurred before, had escaped him.

Susanne, Mrs. Ordway's maid, though modestly in the background, was rarely out of sight; and a white-capped nurse, till now an occasional and illusive vision in the halls, blew in and out of the sickroom like a breeze, bringing liquids in glasses, which the patient obediently swallowed. Laurie, his attention once caught, took it all in. But his face gave no hint of his new knowledge, and the eyes of Louise still met his with the challenge they turned on every one these days—a challenge that definitely forbade either understanding or sympathy.

"The real problem is why you ever come." She spoke lightly, but looked at him with genuine affection. Laurie was one of her favorites, her prime favorite, indeed, next to Bob and Barbara. He smiled at her with tender significance.

"You know why I come."

"I do," she agreed, "perfectly. I know you're quite capable of flirting with me, too, if I'd let you, you absurd Boy. Dearie"—for a moment or two she was almost serious—"why don't you fall in love?"

"And this from you?"

"Don't be foolish. You know I like your ties," she interpolated kindly. "But, really, isn't there some one?"

Laurie turned his profile to her, pulled a lock of hair over his brow, clasped his hands between his knees and posed esthetically.

"Do you know," he sighed, "I begin to think that, just possibly, perhaps, there's a slight chance—that there is!"

"Be serious. Tell me about her."

"Well, she's a girl." He produced this confidence with ponderous solemnity. "She lives across the square from me," he added.

"Things brighten," commented Louise, drily. "Go on."

"She's mysterious. I don't know who she is, or anything about her. But I know that she's in trouble."

"Of course she is! I have never known a mysterious maiden that wasn't," commented the woman of the world. "What's her particular variety of trouble?"

Laurie reflected.

"That's hard to say," he brought out at last. "But it appears to be mixed up with an offensive person in a crumpled blue suit who answers to the name of Herbert Ransome Shaw. Have you ever heard of him?"

Louise wrinkled her fastidious nose.

"Never, I'm happy to say. But he doesn't sound atttractive. However, tell me all about them. There seems a good chance that they may get you into trouble."

"That's what she said."

"It's the one gleam of intelligence I see in the situation," commented his candid friend. "Is she pretty?"

"As lovely in her way as you are. Think you could help her any?" wheedled Laurie.

"I doubt it. I'm too selfish to be bothered with girls who are in trouble. I'll tell you who can help her—Sonya Orleneff."

"Of course!" Laurie beamed at her. "Wonder why I didn't think of that."

"Probably because it was so obvious. Sonya is in town, as it happens, stopping at the Warwick. She has brought the Infant Samuel to New York to have his adenoids cut out. Samuel made a devastating visit here this morning. He's getting as fat as a little pig, and when he walks he puffs like a worn-out automobile going up a steep grade. He came up my stairs on 'low,' and I'm sure they heard him on the avenue. I almost offered him a glass of gasolene. But he is a lamb," she added reflectively. Oddly enough, Samuel, late of New York's tenements, was another of her favorites.

Laurie was following his own thoughts. Sonya was in town! Then, however complicated his problem, it was already as good as solved.

"My dinner will be up soon," suggested Louise. "Are you dining with me?"

He glanced at his watch, reproachfully shook his head at it, and rose.

"Three hours of me are all you can have this time. But I'll probably drop around about dawn tomorrow."

"Nice boy!" Her hot hand caught his and held it. "Laurie, if—if—I should send for you suddenly sometime—you'd come and—stand by?"

All the gaiety was wiped from his face. His brilliant black eyes, oddly softened, looked into her haughty blue ones with sudden understanding.

"You bet I will!" Any time, anything! You'll remember that? Send for me as if I were Bob. Perhaps you've forgotten it," he added, more lightly, "but I happen to be your younger brother."

For a moment her face twisted. The mask of her arrogance fell from it.

Fate is about to turn a trick, but Laurie is too practical and hard-headed to worry over "mysteries."

Calling the Turn

The pastor looked over his glasses and shook his uncut locks.

"Carry out my original declaration," he said, "I am about to call the names of those persons who are now asleep in the congregation. John Haycock."

There was no response.

"John Haycock!"

The stout man stirred again.

"Be down in a minute," he drowsily murmured. "Keep things hot for me."

The pastor's voice rang out:

"You're going down, all right; John Haycock, and things will be kept very hot for you, I'm sure. Let us now sing the ninety-ninth hymn."

Harvard Alters Former Policy

Coach Horween Showing How to Receive Ball.

Harvard certainly has changed its ideas about coaching. Football staffs of past years have been recruited from the ranks of former Crimson players. It has remained for Arnold Horween, the new head mentor, to break down precedent.

Horween, of course, is an old Harvard star. But for his assistants he is reaching into the Middle West. First, he engaged Chuck Carney, former Illinois end. Chuck will handle the Cambridge wings, a position similar to that he held at Wisconsin last fall. Then Horween added Jim Brader, all-western tackle in 1921, who served as line coach at Wisconsin a year ago.

Jim Cooney Is Playing Father's Old Position

The Cubs' shortstop, Jim Cooney, is playing the same position in which his father made a big reputation as a member of the late Captain Anson's Chicago White Stockings in 1890, writes Joe Vila in the New York Sun. Nearly all of Anson's stars deserted him for the Chicago Brotherhood team, managed by Charley Comiskey. As a result of this walkout, Anson had to build up a new team. His scouts in New England induced him to sign Jimmy Cooney to cover shortstop. Cooney was short and thick set. In a week or two he was fielding magnificently and batting heavily. Anson prized the little fellow highly and placed him at the top of the Chicago's batting order.

Anson played first that year, with Glenalvin his final choice for second base. Cooney was a fixture at short and the late Tommy Burns, who had remained loyal to the National league in the big baseball war, was a star at third base. Two of the outfielders were Walter Wilmot and Dummy Hoy, both obtained from the Washingtons, while nearly all of the catching was done by Malachi Kittredge.

Anson's best pitchers were the late Bill Hutchison, a former Yale man, who was well-known in baseball as "the iron horse," and Luby, who not only was a smart boxman, but also a powerful hitter.

Cooney of the Cubs, is a brother of Johnny Cooney of the Boston Braves. Their dad filled the shoes of Big Ed Williamson, on Anson's reconstructed team.

Will Teach Armenians

The photograph shows Everett D. Gunn of Wichita, Kan., who has been sent out to the Near East Relief orphanage center at Alexandropol, Armenia, to teach American games and ideals of sportsmanship to the orphan wards of American charity as part of their training for life. Baseball will be one of his subjects.

McGinnity Explains Why "Ironmen" Have Passed

Joe McGinnity, who claims to have thrown more curve balls than any other two pitchers in organized baseball, says that "iron men" have passed out of the major leagues because most modern hurlers grasp the pellet improperly and fail to take the mound often enough.

McGinnity, whose pitching career extended over a period of 32 years, maintains that "curve pitching, properly done, is no greater strain on the arm than fast ball pitching."

"After pitching a game, the young fellows of today lay off for a week," he continued. "I don't think I ever went a season in the majors without pitching at least fifty games."

McGinnity was first called the "iron man" when he pitched six games in seven days and won them all. He is working as a pitching coach with the Brooklyn Nationals.

Best Pitching Record

One of the best pitching performances hung up in the major leagues of recent years was that made by Adolfo Luque, Cincinnati's right-handed Cuban, in 1923. Luque turned in 27 victories against 8 defeats that year, or a percentage of .771. He allowed but 1.93 earned runs per fray, a remarkably low average nowadays. Since then Luque has found the going rather rough and rocky, however. In the two following seasons he lost more games than he won.

Cards Win Apples

According to Westbrook Pegler, writing in the Chicago Tribune, Grover Cleveland Alexander, who made such a remarkable showing in the recent world series, is guilty of eating apples in bed. What could be more conducive to sleep than to lie in bed and listen to your bedfellow champing an apple? A bunch of old he-tom cats on the back fence caterwauling along about midnight would be more pleasant. A Missouri nursery firm, hearing of Old Pete's fondness for apples, struck on the happy idea of spreading the vice and offered a box of Golden Delicious apples to every Cardinal player making a clean hit during the series. Nearly every player on the team won one or more boxes. Alexander, Bob O'Farrell and Babe Ruth, the latter making three home runs in one game, each received five boxes. What an awful noise there must be in Old Pete's room these cool nights.

BABE RUTH SETS SERIES RECORD

Bambino Only Player to Get in Seven Classics.

A record for participation in world's series by an individual player was established when Babe Ruth went to bat in the opening game of the annual classic this year.

He was taking part in his seventh world's series and is the only player to enjoy that distinction. At the present time five other players share the record of having played in six of the annual series. These are, Home-Run Baker, Eddie Collins, Wallie Schang and Everett Scott.

Ruth has played in three world's series with the Red Sox and four with the Yankees. His first world series was in 1915 as a member of the Red Sox. He took part in only one game against the Phillies that year and he was used as a pinch hitter, failing to connect in his only time at bat.

In the series of 1916 against the Robins he was used in one game as a pitcher and he scored a 13-inning shutout over the Brooklyn club. In the series of 1918 against the Cubs the Red Sox again used him as a pitcher and he hurled 16 more scoreless innings. He holds the world's series record of having pitched a total of 29 scoreless innings.

Ruth took part in the first world's series as a Yankee in 1921 against the Giants. He played the outfield in six games that year and he made five hits in 16 times at bat. In the following year he played the outfield for the Yankees in all five games against the Giants. He made only two hits in 17 times at bat that year.

In 1923 Ruth participated in his third world's series with the Yankees. He played in all six games against the Giants that year and he helped defeat the National league champions by making seven hits in 19 times at bat for an average of .368.

J. Franklin Baker, one of the players who shares the record of participating in six world's series, took part in four of the annual classics with the Athletics and in two while a member of the Yankees. Collins also played in four of the championship series with the Athletics and in his other two he wore the uniform of the White Sox. Schang has taken part in world's series as a member of three different clubs. He first played in two with the Athletics, then one with the Red Sox and then three as a member of the Yankees.

Everett Scott has been eligible to play in six world's series, but he took an active part in only five. He played in three with the Red Sox and then two with the Yankees. He was among the eligible players on the Washington roster last year, but he did not actually get into a game. He has since dropped out of the game.

Jennings Sees Games

Hughey Jennings, assistant manager of the New York Giants, who has been recuperating in the Pocomo mountains from a nervous breakdown he suffered last winter, witnessed the first two games of the world's series between the Yankees and Cardinals. He said he had almost fully recovered from his illness. The picture shows that he has not lost any of his interest in the game.

Lester Bell Big Factor

One of the stars on this year's Cardinal team is Lester Bell, third baseman. Bell's consistent work at the plate was a potent factor in the club's drive for the pennant. This is the youngster's second season as a regular. Last year he hit .285, but this season winds up at the .340 mark, a nice gain considering the less lively ball now in use. Bell started out as a shortstop, but was switched to the hot corner last year, and he sure has made good with the fans.

Will They Change the Name of Our Town?

Drawing by Ray Walters.

DO YOU like the name of your town? Do you want it changed? Can you present good reasons for making a change?

Whether you want a change or not, now is the time for everyone interested in place names to come forward and assist the government in its gigantic task of compiling the hundreds of thousands of names bestowed on geographic units and natural objects throughout America. Now for the first time Smith Jones' corners, Wildcat creeks, Shack mountains and amusingly named hamlets in the country are to be christened officially by the federal government.

This compilation will include the spelling of each name for authentication, proper spelling, and in many cases propriety and convenience. Attempt will be made to evolve new names for places which now have none. Then all will be published in the official gazetteer.

"The history of the nation is recorded largely in these names," said Isaiah Bowman, chairman of the United States Geographic board, which is to supervise the work. "It is a big job and the board will need a lot of library help. We hope to develop widespread and constructive interest in place names."

The board is appealing to the governors of the states to assist in quickening the sources of the vast amount of material which the board must consider and scrutinize. The gazetteer will contain the name, authentically spelled even as to spelling, of every hamlet, village, town and other geographical unit, as well as that of every creek, river, bay, inlet, mountain and natural object having or deserving a distinctive name.

The majority of cases names already exist in undisputed forms, and frequently much of the task will be compilation only. It is expected, however, that when the board is ready to pass on these officially there will be many demands that old names be discarded and new ones adopted. But without the stimulation to such action as the present work provides, as the past regularly has had many requests of that same nature.

Making up the official gazetteer many changes probably will be thought desirable in certain instances on account of confusing duplications and sometimes truly objectionable terminology. Recently, for example, the board accepted a new name for Little Smallpox creek in Wisconsin because of the claim that the old name carried a detrimental suggestion.

The board has good reason for undertaking this work. In probably no other country in the world is there such a tremendous duplication of place names as in the United States. There are, for example, dozens of Deer and Silver creeks. There are ten or more Lookout mountains, at least two of which are of note historically or otherwise. Scores of towns have been named after famous Americans and well-known European places: the Parises and Londons are legion. This of course results in using the same names more than ever.

There are cases of small villages in the same county using the same names, and many instances of neighboring streams being identified by the same name. These confusions made little difference in the early days of the country, but now, with intensified communication, they are bothersome in many ways. This is particularly true in map making of the kind done by the United States geological survey.

Confusion of many kinds has been found. There are instances of a multiplication of names by common usage for the same place or object. There are small rivers known to people in one county by a name different from the one designating it in another county. Mountains called Hogback on one side are called Green on the other.

In gazetteering places and objects that have more than one name each the board must decide which are most authentic and appropriate. There is room for a thousand heated local disputes in the clarifying of these confusions. Many people surrender old place names with great reluctance and many others are equally disputative about the way place names should be spelled.

In formulating the gazetteer new names will have to be originated, for there is still a large number of nameless natural objects of distinction or importance in the country. In the Rockies alone there are hundreds of tall mountain peaks which never have been christened.

In clarifying confusion and finding appropriate new names a vast amount of research in local history, custom, philology and convenience must be done. Little attention will be paid to etymology as such, for in evolving place names usage as a rule ignores that science. When L'Eau Frais becomes Low Freight or custom turns Aux Aues into Ozan the national board raises no staying hand. For the most part the board attempts only to guide the currents of usage.

Old names, such as reflect early history or preserve the names of original settlers, are preferred. The objection that an old name is homely or even ludicrous does not carry much weight with the board. Indian names, wherever preserved, also have the affection of the board. But in passing on these no attempt is made to conform to the originals as against usage or simplicity.

Desert Reservoir

In the hot desert region of Arizona and Mexico the cactus stores in its thick leaves every drop of water or dew that it can get, so that there is always a supply for a dry season. In reality the spines of the cactus are the remnants of its leaves, and the so-called leaves are the modified stalks.

In the waterless regions where the cactus grows it has very little use for leaves that would only wither away from the heat, so it reduces them to a very effective weapon against all enemies, and then swells the stalks to make the kind of water tank it can best use for its purposes.

THROUGH A WOMAN'S EYES

By JEAN NEWTON

(©, by the Bell Syndicate, Inc.)

The Tyranny of Things

In his "Story of Mankind" Hendrick Van Loon says of the Greeks:

"The story of Greek life is a story of simplicity. 'Things,' chairs and tables and books and houses and carriages, are apt to take up a great deal of their owner's time. In the end they invariably make him their slave and his hours are spent looking after their wants, keeping them polished and brushed and painted. The Greeks, before everything else, wanted to be 'free,' both in mind and in body. That they might maintain their liberty and be truly free in spirit they reduced their daily needs to the lowest possible point."

And this reminds me of the time when I was a little girl, when a very rich lady who lived in a very large house with a great many servants remarked to my mother that she was going away to rest from her household duties. That appealed to my baby sense of humor. Six servants—and she needed a rest from household duties!

My mother tried to explain what I have long since discovered—that the larger her house and the greater the number of her servants, the bigger is a woman's job.

And so it is with most of the "things" we call luxuries. They tyrannize over us. Like the woman who must remain indoors on a beautiful day because the crystal closet must be washed or the hangings cleaned, most of us are in some measure under the tyranny of things.

Silver has to be constantly polished. Furniture must be dusted and kept shining. Jewels must be locked in strong boxes of which people are constantly losing the keys! Indeed, the tramp takes the lonely road with less care and a lighter heart than the woman who rides in a limousine bedecked with jewels on account of which she is in fear of her life.

It has been said that "Heavy lies the head that wears a crown," but not heavier than the man's whose bolted doors must guard valuables that invite thieves.

A woman whom I suspect of Greek ancestry made the remark the other day that with the glorious out-of-doors and so many wonderful and interesting things in life to enjoy, it is a crime that we must give so much time to simply "keeping the wheels going round"—the dressmaker and the hairdresser and the butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker, house, home and other routine.

The Greeks in their simplicity had the right idea.

The Art of Living

"I seem to be alright," a perfectly sane woman is known to have remarked, "when everything runs smoothly. But the moment anything happens to upset my routine my nerves get the better of me and I am completely floored."

I wonder whether she realized the significance of her confession!

"As long as things run smoothly" —anybody can get along. Then there is no need for initiative or competence or courage. The most helpless infant can get along and be "alright."

"As long as things run smoothly" —anybody can stay good natured. Then there is no need for poise or sacrifice or self-control. An enraged bull rushing downhill is harmless if no one gets in his path.

The test of us humans is how we handle the situations that do not run run smoothly—how we act in the face of disappointment, or hardship, or injustice.

Do we have poise, judgment, control? Do we retain our perspective and our own sense of justice?

Or are we "floored"—defeated before we begin? Do we run amuck, and, like the wild bull, make whoever happens to come in our path suffer for it?

When things go smoothly we are not "going along"—we are being carried along on one of the pleasant tributaries of the river of life.

But when the currents cross and we find ourselves in unfriendly waters, which, if we let them, would rush us to the deadly rapids, that is the time when we must keep our heads and strike out and swim—that is the time that tests our caliber.

And one thing we must all learn is that there is not one of life's tributaries, no matter how pleasant, that will carry us benignantly all the way to the sea. Just as there is no land road that is without snags, smooth all the way, so the kindest currents must sometimes cross and put us on our mettle.

We have all got to take the rough with the smooth and to know how to take the rough smoothly is the whole art of living.

Making Progress

Marion was a flirtatious young woman, and had been engaged many times, but at the age of thirty she was still unmarried. Two of her feminine friends were discussing her case. "It looks as if Marion is not making a very good running in the matrimonial race," one said. "Oh, I don't know about that," the other remarked. "I passed by her house last night, and looking in her living-room window I noticed that she is on her twelfth lap."

Roosevelt Knew Secret

One of the secrets of Theodore Roosevelt's active life and strenuous disposition was his ability to thoroughly relax for 15 minutes at a time during the course of a hard day's work. He had the facility of ceasing to work, throwing himself back in a chair and relaxing. This relaxation, according to physicians, was as good as an hour's sleep. Few men could detach themselves from worry and strain for short periods as did Roosevelt.

POULTRY

SELECT BREEDING STOCK FOR 1927

Early fall is none too early for poultry keepers to make plans for the 1926 breeding stock, says Cora Cooke, poultry specialist with the department of agriculture, University of Minnesota. A Wisconsin authority has said that the selection of breeders should begin as soon as the chicks are hatched.

Miss Cooke says the following requirements should be kept in mind when breeders are being selected: 1, of a pure breed; 2, high vitality; 3, high producing ability as shown by records or examination; 4, right size and type; 5, conforming as nearly as possible to the proper breed and variety characteristics.

"Further information, such as may be obtained by trap-nesting and pedigree, is very valuable," says the specialist. "Absolute knowledge as to how many eggs a hen has laid in her pullet year, how many times she has been broody, and what kind of eggs she lays is a distinct help in selection. But when trap-nesting is not practicable, ordinary examination will achieve results, though in a somewhat smaller degree.

"After selecting the breeders it is important to keep them in the best physical condition for breeding. This calls for comfortable quarters with plenty of room, fresh air and sunshine. The birds should have an ordinary laying ration which will keep them in good flesh without their getting too fat."

Bird Tick Very Serious Menace to Turkey Grower

Dr. W. A. Billings of the agricultural extension service, University of Minnesota, warns turkey growers to be on the lookout for the bird tick which has made its debut in Atkin county, its first appearance in Minnesota. This tick should not be confused with the common Minnesota wood tick or the fowl tick of the Southern states. It has the same general appearance, but is a distinct species.

"The ticks are seen most around the eyes and necks of the young turkeys," says Doctor Billings. "They are very destructive and in one outbreak killed 40 out of 46 poults. There is no successful treatment. The only thing that can be done is to go over the birds once or twice a week by hand and pick off the ticks.

"It is possible these parasites were introduced into Minnesota from wild fowl or through the interchange of breeding stock from other states. The tick appeared in Vermont in 1909."

Teach Chicks to Roost as Early as Possible

As soon as possible chicks should be taught to roost. After they roost the dangers of crowding or piling in the corners is eliminated and a great problem of the poultry keeper is nearing solution. At the earliest opportunity roosts should be installed a foot or eighteen inches above the floor along the back of the house so as to encourage roosting. One should carefully observe the chicks and always provide an abundance of roosting space. The brooder house should be supplied with fresh air so as to afford comfort to the chicks. This discourages their roosting in trees. A good rule is to get the chicks on the roost at the earliest age possible.

Discrimination Against Eggs in Cold Storage

An interesting argument has been going on recently over the question, "When Is an Egg Fresh?" Undue discrimination against eggs that have been kept in cold storage has aroused butter and egg dealers to an effort to change the public attitude. One suggestion is that storage eggs should be labeled "Kept Fresh in Cold Storage." It is pointed out that eggs which are placed in cold storage are of the finest quality, being produced in the spring, and may actually be better after several months of keeping than others which are fresh in the present use of that term.

Roosts for Turkeys

A great many of the turkey growers build the roosts about 10 or 12 feet high for the large turkeys and about 5 or 6 feet high for the young ones; around these roosts is built a 6-foot fence with a large gate. When the turkeys get their feed and drink on return from the fields they are driven into this enclosure and the gate shut; in this way dogs, coyotes and other animals are kept away and the turkeys are amply protected against thieves.

Spray for Mites

Mites live in the house, laying low in the daytime, and swarming over the hens at night, sucking their blood and poisoning their sleep with evil dreams. The best way to put a crimp in their game is, first, to scrub the house out thoroughly with strong soapsuds, then spray the walls, roosts and everything else in the house, with a 5 per cent solution of some good coal-tar disinfectant. Repeat the spraying in three or four days and keep the house clean.

Place Dropping Boards

Dropping boards should be somewhere near three feet off the floor and be placed ordinarily in the most sheltered part of the house, which is usually on the back wall under the low part of a shed-type house. Roosts should be about six inches above the boards, the last roost being nine inches from the back wall and other roosts 12 to 14 inches apart. Eight or nine inches of roosting space should be allowed per bird. This will prevent crowding.

Murray Motor Company Deliver New Brougham In Redwood City

ROY W. MURRAY, MANAGER OF MURRAY MOTOR CO. SHAKING HANDS WITH L. C. NEWTON MR. NEWTON AND O. S. OLESON ARE THE PROUD OWNERS OF THE HANDSOME BROUGHAM PICTURED ABOVE

It is a hustling, bustling bunch at the Murray motor Company. Yes Sir! It is, and they have started off in their new Redwood City location with a bang. First delivery, a shiney new brougham before the work on the salesroom was even completed. How is tha for speed?

Mr. Murray does not, however, take the credit for himself and his organization. He says it is Rickenbaker that makes the sales, and the proud owners of the agency's first delivery in this city, agree with Mr. Murray. They are both extravagant in their praises of the riding qualities and performance of the new car. This is the third Rickenbaker for Mr. Newton which is eloquent testimony of his opinion of Rickenbaker performance.

"Integrity is in every part of the machine," says Mr. Newton. "From many thousands of miles of hard driving of Rickenbaker cars, I have learned that I can depend absolutely upon faithful performance week in and week out, month in and month out. I liked my old "Rick" and thought I was satisfied with it, until I rode in the new Brougham, which for riding comfort and snappy performance is the sweetest running car I ever drove."

Mr. Murray has spent many years in Rickenbaker employ and his experience eminently fits him to give efficient service to Rickenbacker owners. His pride in the cars he sells is engendered of long and intimate association.

With a great deal of pride he said, "The keynote of Rickenbacker policy is one quality and that the best.

"Last year there were "standard" types and "Deluxe" models.

"It was found that the class of buyers who constitute the Rickenbacker clientelle considered price a secondary matter and qality all important. As a result, the greater demand was for the deluxe models at the higher price.

"Inasmuch as it always been the desire of the Rickenbacker Motor Company to make the best and only the best, it was gratifying to find that our customers also desired that the degree of quality in their cars and were willing to pay the difference.

"Consequently, for this year the same sogan applies to bodies as to chassis, namely:

"Built Up To A Standard—Not Down To A Price."

"Every Rickenbacker model this year, whether open or closed type, will conform to the highest standard in upholstery, finish, trimmings and every other detail."

The Murray Motor Company salesroom is at 757 El Camino Real, and the public is invited to call and inspect the line of cars on display.

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

TUBERCULAR CLINIC FOR REDWOOD CITY

In view of the fact that 300 food handlers were admitted to the tuberculosis hospitals last year, said Edythe Tate Thompson, director of the bureau of tuberculosis, it does not make so much difference to the general public, she said, when you find a man in a lighthouse suffering with tuberculosis, but when one finds what we have in a recent survey, candy maekrs, cooks, restaurant workers, waiters and waitresses, cannery workers and bakers, ranking next to housewives and casual laborers who comprise at present the largest group in both our clinic and hospital population, it shows clearly the necessity for the protection of the general public that food handlers be given a physical examination. These diagnostic clinics are being conducted all over California in order that people may receive an examination and place themselves under care and treatment. There is no charge at these clinics, as the patients are returned to their own physician, and if unable to do that, to attend free clinic which is held in Redwood City Friday, Nov. 5th at the Woman's Club house. Dr. Frederick Ebersin, of San Francisco, Dr. Louis Bornestraff, San Jose, and Dr. John Williams, San Jose were the clinicians in Redwood City.

BUILDING ACTIVE IN SAN CARLOS GARDENS

Building activities in San Carlos Gardens are reported by E. L. Hoag of the firm of Lyon & Hoag, to be most active.

During the week the well known builder, S. A. Wisnom purchased twelve lots facing on Rosewood avenue, upon which he intends to build twelve houses for sale. Mr. Wisnom is well known for the character of his buildings.

Another very well known San Mateo builder, Mr. A. W. Koch, purchased the entire frontage on Elm street between Morse boulevard and Brittan avenue, consisting of twelve lots and will immediately start the erection of three houses.

Both of these builders are very well known in San Mateo and the fact that they have bought the lots for cash and have started operations in San Carlos Gardens, Mr. Hoag maintains speaks very well for its future growth.

Other well-known builders who have purchased there and have already started operations, include such men as David Houle and Hugh MacDonald of Burlingame, Gustav Meister of San Mateo, as well as A. W. Gordon, Edgar Selleck and Charles Leis, all of San Mateo. The property presents a very active appearance as there have been started very recently fifteen houses and those that have been finished have met with very ready sale. The new operations of Wisnom and Koch will add very much to the activities.

In addition to the lots sold to builders there have also been many lots sold to individuals who purchased for home building. In Hoag's opinion the fact that a number of builders are developing the property, will add a variety to the character of the homes and is better than to have one builder or one firm build stereotype houses. None of the builders above mentioned can or will build anything but attractive homes as San Carlos Gardens is restricted to said purposes.
